

Luther and BRYTER enter into strategic partnership for the use of artificial intelligence in legal and tax consulting

Cologne, 8 May 2025 – Luther Rechtsanwaltsgesellschaft mbH is pushing ahead with its digital transformation: the full-service law firm is entering into a strategic partnership with BRYTER in the field of AI-supported legal and tax advice. This will enable Luther to complement its expertise with the targeted use of artificial intelligence (AI) and open up new, future-oriented solutions for clients.

In future, Luther will increasingly integrate AI solutions into its consulting portfolio. This will be achieved across the board by integrating AI-supported tools into office products. All Luther employees will have interdisciplinary access to BRYTER's software solutions to support complex tasks in the field of legal and tax consulting. In addition, Luther is establishing a 'Centre of Excellence' (CoE) in cooperation with BRYTER. The aim is to identify further innovative application scenarios for AI and to implement them for the law firm.

The strategic partnership brings added value for both sides: Luther provides the technical input, identifies and specifies client needs, while BRYTER delivers the customised technology-driven solution. At the CoE, Luther is training its own legal engineers in the new technology together with BRYTER. These engineers will spread the AI-based technology throughout the law firm, thereby playing an important role in the firm's digital transformation. In addition, the CoE continuously and frequently identifies further innovative application scenarios for AI and implements them in cooperation with BRYTER.

Luther Managing Partner Dr Markus Sengpiel says: 'Our strategic partnership with BRYTER is an essential component of Luther's innovation strategy, which is aimed at further professionalising the quality, efficiency and scalability of our client work through technology. With this step, we are underlining our pioneering role in the field of innovation and sending a clear signal that we are committed to providing our clients with future-proof advice.'

Michael Grupp, CEO of BRYTER, adds: 'Intelligent, AI-supported tools will play an increasingly central role in law firms and support human consulting. Luther has been an important partner and client of BRYTER for many years. In addition to its full-service expertise in its areas of consulting and its exceptional client proximity, the firm is also committed to providing its clients and employees with state-of-the-art solutions. I am delighted that we are now deepening our cooperation in the field of artificial intelligence: Together, we are developing targeted applications that are tailored to the specific requirements of Luther's client work – secure, scalable and with high practical benefits. The result is a model that demonstrates how technology and legal excellence can work together effectively.'

The central foundation of the cooperation with BRYTER is an exclusive, secure private cloud environment created specifically for working with AI-supported tools to ensure comprehensive data security and meet the high requirements for data protection and confidentiality in the legal and tax sectors.
